Preface.

THE publication of this book, being a rather odd and interesting undertaking, probably calls for a few words in explanation. The publisher began the work first as a manuscript list of desirable names within the city limits, for use in his own business. This list grew to such proportions that, thinking it would prove of general interest to the public, it was decided to add much useful information, and issue the whole in book form. To this end competent gentlemen were engaged to call on each family in person to obtain the necessary information. The difficulties to contend against proved very great. It was compiled without any intention to draw any hard and fast lines of respectability, or to discriminate in any way between the social rights or position of our people. The publisher is aware that the lists are by no means complete; many persons refused the information desired, while others could not be found on the first application and second calls being impossible, they were necessarily omitted; and thus it comes that nothing more is claimed for the book than a pretty fair surrounding of the social element. The Classification by Streets will be found particularly useful. The Club and Society Lists are official. The Theatre Diagrams are copies of the box-office sheets, officially corrected, and will be found a great convenience to amusement-goers, in the matter of locating seats. The summary of Points of Etiquette will serve as a handy jog to polite memory and breeding. The Personnel of the daily Press we believe is here published for the first time.

If there are any — and undoubtedly there are many — whose names have been omitted, it must be attributed rather to the difficulties attending the obtaining of information, than the idea which may naturally arise, of deliberate exclusion, and all such omissions will be supplied in the future. Taken altogether, it is hoped that the Directory will be found valuable as a reference, useful as a guide, and interesting as a social souvenir.

[The rules here given are compiled from many sources, and are intended to be at once concise and comprehensive. They are sufficient for all ordinary purposes of social intercourse, and will supply the ordinary need of a more elaborate work.]

CARD ETIQUETTE.

The significations of corners turned on visiting cards:

Upper right corner — Visit.
Turning the entire left end — A call on the family.
R. S. V. P. — Please answer.
P. P. C. — To take leave.

To send a card without calling, signifies inability to call in person.

Acceptances or regrets should be sent as soon as possible after receiving invitations. If no reply is requested, and no regrets sent, it is understood the invitation is accepted.

"Party calls" should be made within one week after date of the party.

Invitations in your own city should be sent by messenger, not by mail.

The custom is for a lady, about to be married, to enclose her card in an unsealed envelope, which the servant should deliver; the lady not leaving the carriage.

To gentlemen's visiting cards, "Mr." should be prefixed to the name.

Any lady wishing to inform her friends of the presence of a lady visiting her family, should enclose her visitor's card with her own, in the same envelope.

An invitation to dine should be answered on the day received.

On receipt of an "At home" card, no reply is required.

An invitation requesting your presence requires an answer.

INTRODUCTIONS.

Ladies of social equality are presented to each other, and so also are gentlemen. When the difference between the parties is doubtful the person introducing may say: "Mrs. G., this is Mrs. M.; Mrs. M. Mrs. G.," thus striking a balance of respect.

A gentleman desiring to be introduced to a lady, must first obtain permission, after which the following formula may be used: "Mr. Arthur desires to be presented to Miss Angell." If the lady making the introduction desires the mutual acquaintance of the parties, she says: "This is Mr. Dawes, Mrs. Maxwell. It gives me pleasure to present him to you." The married lady replies according to her feeling, and, of course, in terms of polite conversation. If she is pleased to know Mr. Dawes, she says so cordially and frankly, at the same time thanking the presentee, who withdraws at once.

A young lady in the same circumstances, politely recognizes the gentlemen, bows and smiles, using the name of the new acquaintance. The gentleman alone should express gratification, adding such compliments as the occasion seems to demand. The introduced parties may be as friendly as they please, but excessive cordiality on first acquaintance is not to be commended.

The etiquette of hand-shaking is simple. A man has no right to take a lady's hand till it is offered. He has even less right to squeeze or retain it. Two ladies shake hands gently and softly. A young lady gives her hand, but does not shake a gentleman's, unless she is his friend. A lady should always rise to give her hand; a gentleman of course, never dares to do so seated. On introduction in a room, a married lady generally offers her hand, a young lady does not.

In a ball room, where the introduction is to dancing, not to friendship, you never shake hands, and as a general rule, an introduction is not followed by shaking hands, only by a bow. It may perhaps be laid down that the more public the place of introduction, the less hand-shaking takes place; but if the introduction be particular, if it be accompanied by personal recommendation, such as, "I want you to know my friend Dawson," or, if Dawson comes with a letter of presentation, then you give Dawson your hand, and warmly too. Lastly, it is the privilege of a superior to offer or withhold his or her hand, so that an inferior should never put his forward first.

If the difference in age between two ladies or two gentlemen be unmistakable, the younger is presented to the elder. If there is an admitted superiority, the disparity in age is unobserved. The unknown person is presented to the man of greater fame without question.

The single lady is introduced to the married lady, and the single gentleman to the married, other things being equal.

Persons born and reared in the best society never make a hasty presentation or introduction. An habitual, though momentary, reflection adjusts in their own minds the proper relation of the two who are about to be made known to each other, and unpleasant mistakes thus become almost impossible.

Introductions should be considered wholly unnecessary to a pleasant conversation. Every person should feel that he is, at least for the time, upon a social equality with every guest who is present. That a person was bidden to the entertainment proves that the host so considers him, and the acceptance of the invitation levels him, for the time, either up or down to the social grade of all whom he may meet, no matter at what estimate he may hold himself when elsewhere. A lady or gentleman must conduct himself or herself, while remaining in the house, as if there were no more exalted society than that which is present.

SALUTATIONS.

"A bow," says La Fontaine, "is a note drawn at sight. You are bound to acknowledge it immediately and to the full amount." According to circumstances it should be respectful, cordial, civil or familiar. An inclination of the head is often sufficient between gentlemen, or a gesture of the hand, or the mere touching of the hat; but in bowing to a lady the hat must be lifted. If you know people slightly, you recognize them slightly; if you know them well, you bow with more cordiality. The body is not bent at all in bowing, as in the days of the old school forms of politeness; the inclination of the head is all that is necessary.

One's own judgment ought to be sufficient as to the empressement of the salutation. In bowing to a lady, the hat is only lifted from the head, not held out at arm's length for a view of the interior. If smoking, the gentleman manages to withdraw his cigar before lifting his hat; or, should he happen to have his hand in his pocket, he removes it.

Gentlemen who are driving are obliged to keep tight hold of the reins, and this is impossible if they remove their hats. A well-bred foreigner would never dream of saluting a lady by raising his whip to his hat. American gentlemen have adopted this custom, but it would be still better if they would set the fashion of bowing without touching the hat or raising the hand, when holding the reins.

A well-bred person bows the moment he recognizes an acquaintance. According to the rules of good society everywhere, everyone who has been introduced to you is entitled to this mark of respect. A bow does not entail a calling acquaintance; to neglect it shows neglect of early education.

A gentleman walking with a lady returns a bow made to her (lifting his hat not too far from his head), although the one bowing is an entire stranger to him.

It is civility to return a bow, even if you do not know the one who is bowing to you.

Should any one wish to avoid a bowing acquaintance with a person who has once been properly introduced, he may do so by looking aside, or dropping the eyes as the person approaches, for if the eyes meet there is no alternative.

Bowing once on a public promenade is all that civility requires. At the second meeting, if you catch the eye of your acquaintance, smile slightly. If the gentleman is an acquaintance, it is better to avert the eyes.

A lady may permit a gentleman who is walking with her to carry any very small parcel that she has, but never more than one.

A lady cannot take the arms of two gentlemen, nor should two ladies take each one arm of a gentlemen, "sandwiching" him, as it were.

Gentlemen do not smoke when driving or walking with ladies, nor on promenades much frequented.

A married lady should always extend her hand to a stranger brought to her house by a common friend, as an evidence of her cordial welcome. Where an introduction is for dancing there is no shaking of hands.

A gentleman when stopped by a lady does not allow her to stand while talking with him, but offers to turn and walk with her.

When a gentlemen joins a lady on the street, turning to walk with her, he is not obliged to escort her home. He can take his leave without making any apology.

Never give the cut direct unless for some inexcusable rudeness. It is better to meet a recognition coldly.

A lady may recognize a gentlemen who has been formally presented to her, even when he cannot recall her face, on account of the difference of appearance made by the change from gaslight to daylight. His acknowledgment of her recognition must be as respectful as to a valued friend.

The same formalities obtain at entertainments. The gentleman, who is a formal acquaintance, waits patiently for the lady guest to recognize his presence.

When calling, gentlemen leave their umbrellas, overcoats, and overshoes in the hall; but take their hats and sticks with them into the drawing-room, unless they are calling on old friends. The hat and stick should never be deposited upon a chair or table, or any other article of furniture. They can be placed upon the floor, very near the chair occupied by the owner, if he does not wish to retain them in his hands. The lady rises to receive him, unless an invalid or of advanced age. If she extends her hand he takes it respectfully without removing his glove. He never offers his hand first. If the call be a hasty one, he seldom seats himself, but takes leave soon after another gentleman enters. The lady retains her seat and bows her adieux, without extending her hand a second time. Hand-shaking is falling into disuse in ordinary visits.

A lady never accompanies a gentleman to the door of the drawing-room, much less to the vestibule, unless she has a profound respect for him. She introduces him to no one unless there is a special reason for the formality, but he converses with her guests as if he had met them before.

No after recognition is warranted between gentlemen, or between ladies, and certainly not between a lady and gentleman, until they shall meet again in the drawing-room, when the gift of mutual speech is resumed.

If the parties desire to be presented to each other, the opportunity is afforded them at these casual meetings. The hostess cannot easily refuse this formality if she be asked to perform it; and, if the acquaintance be mutually agreeable, it is well; but, if not, the lady can speedily terminate it between herself and a gentleman.

A gentleman always lifts his hat when offering service to a lady, as in restoring her fan or kerchief, or when opening a door that she may pass before him. She is expected simply to bow her acknowledgment.

Young gentlemen must not be over sensitive if they are not recognized on the promenade after having been hospitably entertained by a lady friend. Such omission is by no means singular where ladies entertain many visitors, and see some of their gentlemen friends rarely. It would be less frequent were young men less in the habit of making their party calls by card.

STRANGERS IN THE CITY.

It is a rule among people of quality to call on persons newly arrived in the city. It is contrary to foreign social usage, but American society approves the custom.

If the visitor comes properly introduced, the entrance to society is easy. Strangers with proper credentials, who come as tourists or as permanent residents, will be duly called upon by hospitable citizens.

In such cases introductions are not needed. The resident ladies call between two and five o'clock, send in their cards with those of their husbands, fathers, or brothers, and a cordial interview follows. This call should be returned within a week, or an explanation sent. If the call is simply returned by a card, it is understood that the strangers prefer solitude, or have reasons for not receiving visitors.

A gentleman should not make a first call upon the ladies of the family of a new-comer without an introduction or an invitation. His lady friend, or kinswoman, may leave his card, and he may receive an invitation, verbal or written, to make the new acquaintance. Under such circumstances, the usual formality of introduction may be made by his second visiting card, which he will send in to announce himself at the time of his call, provided he pays his respects to the new household unaccompanied by a common friend.

A stranger cannot first call upon an old resident, unless a meeting and mutual liking should pave the way to it. Good feeling may prepare the way for either to make the initiatory visit. This etiquette is based upon the supposition that the elder lady belongs to a larger circle of friends, and has more pressing social duties than the younger one. If the parties are equal in age and position, the one whose reception day arrives earliest should receive the first call.

Aged gentlemen or ladies, an eminent personage or clergymen, always receive the first call. It is proper to leave a card for them, even when they are known to be too much engaged either to receive in person or to return calls of ceremony. The card signifies respectful and appreciative remembrance.

VISITING AND VISITING CARDS FOR LADIES.

The visiting card conveys a subtle and unmistakable meaning. It can express perfect breeding. It is the safest herald of an introduction for a stranger. Its text should be fine, and its engraving a plain script.

In every case where there is no title there should be the prefix "Mrs." or "Miss," the name being in clear letters of medium size.

Letters of introduction are not so much used as formerly. An acquaintance to be formed between between strangers may be arranged by card where personal presentation is inconvenient. The introducing lady writes on the upper left-hand corner of her own visiting card the formula: "Introducing Mrs. Charles Anderson."

This card is enclosed in an envelope of fine quality with that of the lady desiring the introduction, and sent by post or messenger. The lady who receives the two cards must call in person, or, if this be impossible, some member of the family must call, or a letter be sent by special messenger to explain the omission. Nothing less than this can be done without offending the introducing party.

If the call is made upon the sender of the two cards, not more than three days should intervene between this courtesy and the introduction, unless an "at home" day is mentioned either on the visiting-card or during the interview. If no special courtesies are extended, and the introduced lady resides at a distance, she must leave a card with P. P. C. (pour prendre conge) written on it to give information of her departure; but if the acquaintance has gone no further than one visit each, she need not call again, and her leave-taking card closes the courtesy. If she be a resident of the city, she may include the new acquaintance in her formal visiting-list, and invite her to receptions; but she cannot first ask the acquaintance, whom she has herself desired, to a breakfast, luncheon or dinner. The first hospitality is a privilege that is very properly reserved to the one who has received an unsought acquaintance.

After a personal introduction, the oldest resident may, if she choose, leave a card, which must be similarly acknowledged within a week, unless a visiting day is engraved or written upon the card of the first caller, when that special occasion cannot be overlooked without a return card or a written apology. No further visiting is necessary, unless mutually convenient or agreeable. When a lady changes her residence, she may leave her card with her new address, upon those to whom she owes visits, or send it by post. Is her new residence is beyond the limits of her old visiting range, or in a disagreeable thoroughfare, her first card on formal acquaintances should not include a call.

A lady leaving for the summer, if the season be well advanced, sends her own and her family's P. P. C. cards, with her temporary address, by mail, unless she takes leave at an accidental interview. When she returns, she sends out her cards with her "at home" day on them.

A young lady about to be married leaves her card. without calling, about three weeks before the event, accompanied by her mother's, or her chaperon's card, the names not being engraved together. An independent address is left for each lady member of the household which she honors.

If a death occurs in the household of a friend, a card with any appropriate sentiment written upon it, or a boquet of cut-flowers and a card, are sent directly. The same gentle recognition of any felicitous event, such as the birth of a child, a private wedding, the entering of a new house, etc., is a pleasant, but not rigid, etiquette among friends and admirers.

Among acquaintances, the card only, with no intruding expressions upon it, is left, either with or without flowers — usually without when a sorrow has fallen upon a family. This card may be that of a stranger even; but it is never sent, and always left in person, or is carried by a special messenger, as a more delicate recognition of the grave event.

This etiquette is not a necessity, it is only a proof of gentle breeding and refined manners, and is growing in special favor.

Cards are always first left in the hall when entering a reception. This custom makes the debtor and creditor list of the entertainer easier to arrange, because announcing names is rarely done in American cities; and, even if it were, in large circles the memory must be excellent that can retain all the faces of those who accept these courtesies. Provided an invitation to a party or a reception is necessarily declined after having been accepted, cards are sent by messenger upon the same evening, and an explanatory note is forwarded the next day, when more leisure will make its excuses and its regrets comprehensible.

An invitation card and a reply to it may go by post, but a card of sympathy or of congratulation cannot. This must be left in person, if possible, otherwise by special messenger.

The forms and qualities of cards, and their style of engraving, are a matter in which a delicate taste is not thrown away.

The husband's card should accompany that of his wife upon all formal occasions, but it is no longer stylish for both names to be engraved upon the same card, except directly after marriage the mother's and the eldest daughter's names are always engraved on the same card during the first season of the young lady's appearance in society, and afterward, if agreeable, in the following form:

Mrs. Henry Brightwood.
Miss Brightwood.
No. —, Wesley Avenue.

If there is more than one daughter in society, "Misses Brightwood" is a proper form to use. When a son has entered society, his mother leaves his card with her husband's and her own, to signify that it is expected he will be included in next season's invitations. After he receives one invitation from a lady, he is presumed to be capable of managing his own social matters by making his party call, and leaving his own card and address.

Not longer than a week must elapse before the cards of all who have been invited, whether the invitation was accepted or not, are to be left by some member of the family, upon both host and hostess, and also upon any one for whom the entertainment may have been given. A single lady member of the family may perform this social duty of returning cards of thanks and congratulations upon the success of the fete.

Gentlemen cannot assist in these social arrangements, and thus relieve the lady members of the family. They may, however, leave a lady's card at a house of sorrow, but not after a festivity.

CARD ETIQUETTE AND VISITING CUSTOMS FOR GENTLEMEN.

A gentleman having been introduced to a lady may be uncertain whether she desires to continue the acquaintance. If he wishes it, he leaves a card, and her mother, or chaperon, sends an invitation to visit the family, or to an entertainment, after which he is expected to call and pay his respects. If the list of the lady's acquaintance be already too extensive, no notice need be taken of the card, and he will wait for further acquaintance until he meets the family again. If he be introduced by card or by letter, he calls upon the lady, inquires for the ladies of the family, and sends in his own card, carefully addressed along with that which introduces him. He is received, if the introducing party be properly respected.

When a gentleman is presented to a lady, the presentation is understood to be complimentary, and she may simply say "Thank you," without asking for a continuance of the acquaintance. When he meets her again, he must await her recognition without seeming to do so. When she bows, he can express his thanks by his manner. If she is pleased with his address or with his position, she may ask him to call upon her. As a well-bred unmarried lady cannot do this, the young gentleman must bide his time by leaving his card, as before intimated. This arrangement renders the making of acquaintances an easy affair, provided it is agreeable to both persons, and it is a wall of defense against strange and unwelcome visitors. However unpleasant the result may be of an attempt to make a lady's acquaintance in this manner, every true gentleman will recognize the necessity of barriers across the sacred threshold of home.

The style of the gentleman's card, and his address, often secure acceptability when combined with the recollection of the host or hostess who made the presentation.

The hostess observes the hour of a gentleman's formal call. If he be a business man, his first call is between half-past eight and nine in the evening. If not, he calls between two and five in the afternoon. Calls should not be made at half-past seven, for fear the lady will be out. Such a course is sure to displease a high-bred young hostess, since it proves he is either ignorant of etiquette or is careless of it.

A gentleman leaves his card for both host and hostess within a week after an entertainment to which he has been invited, whether he has accepted or declined the hospitality. If he cannot call, the card is imperative.

Invitations to parties, balls, receptions and kettle-drums, should all be answered, and then there can be no misunderstanding.

A gentleman introducing another by card, sends his own with that of the person introduced. It may be sent by post, and its reception must be recognized within three days, or an explanation and an offer of courtesies to the stranger must be sent by special messenger. After this the acquaintance may continue, or may cease if the receiver of the introductory card deem no further civility necessary to the presenting person.

A gentleman may leave his card for a bereaved friend, or in other delicate ways signify his sympathy, but unless the friendship be a very familiar one he should not write to him of the bereavement, or speak to him of it when they meet.

A gentleman never makes a formal call without asking to see all the ladies of the family. He sends in or leaves his card for each individual. If he be calling upon a young lady who is a guest in a household with whom he has no acquaintance, he must ask to see her hostess at the same time, and also send her his card. This hostess of his friend may decline interrupting his visit with her presence, but it is considered elegant and hospitable for her to descend before his visit terminates, to assure him that her guest's friends are welcome to her house.

When he desires to see a lady whom he meets in society, she may, if the acquaintance warrants it, and she has been out in society one full season, receive him without the presence of her mother or chaperon, and he may not construe this informality into an indelicacy. It is a standard of social freedom that is proper to an American.

The mother is likely to excuse herself. She knows the constantly expressed desire to see herself is complimentary and respectful, and as such the well-bred lady usually receives it; but should she appear, and remain during the entire visit, all the same, he must be agreeable to her, and ask for her every time he calls.

GENERAL DIRECTIONS FOR CARDS AND CALLING.

A call in person should not be returned by a card.

After cards have been left once in the season, they need not be left again, excepting after an invitation, or upon a guest stopping in the house.

A gentlemen invited by a lady to call upon her, cannot, without showing her great discourtesy, neglect to pay the call within a week. He is not obliged to repeat it, or to do more than leave his card at her door.

Cards and invitations sent by post should be removed from their stamped envelopes before putting them in the card receiver.

The rule found in books on etiquette, "Visiting cards can under no circumstances be sent by post, or delivered in envelopes at the door," is in a fair way of becoming a dead rule. It has always had its exceptions.

When a lady receives weekly, a resident, desiring of calling upon her, cannot make a first call on the reception day, unless asked to call on that day.

After such a card has once been left, one is at liberty to call the following season on the same day, unless a card has been left or sent in the meantime with the day changed.

Persons living in the same neighborhood should select the same day for receiving. It is too much to expect your friends to remember the days that are not arranged for particular localities, and wanting in thoughtfulness for their convenience as well.

In respect to the Cincinnati custom of all ladies having stated days for receiving, a noble lady writing on etiquette, says: "To receive visitors on a stated day in each week is only to be justified by the exigencies of a lofty position." To this we might add for social use: "Unless the convenience of callers is studied by the uniting of an entire neighborhood on a given day." The day fixed by the oldest resident should be adopted by all.

One cannot return the calls of elderly ladies, or even of their equals in age, by leaving cards at the door. It is not considered respectful. If the cards of persons much younger are left after hospitalities extended to them, one is at liberty to make a card serve for a return visit.

A call upon persons in mourning, and all cards of condolence should be returned with mourning cards when the family begin to make their appearance in public. Calls upon a bereaved family should be made within ten days by intimate friends, and within a month by mere acquaintances. Those who wish to leave cards only inquire after the health of the family, leaving cards in person.

Calls are due to the newly married, and also to the parents who have sent the invitations.

Turning the upper right corner of a card implies a visit.
Turning the upper left corner, congratulations.
Turning the lower right corner, adieu.
Turning the lower left corner, condolence.
Turning the entire left end, a call on the family.
R. S. V. P. means "Please answer."
P. P. C. "To take leave."

Not more than three cards should be left at the same time on the members of the same family.

THE KETTLE-DRUM.

A kettle-drum is understood to be a light entertainment with demi-toilette for both ladies and gentlemen. It is said to have originated in garrisons in England and India, where a drumhead is often made to do duty for a tea-table. They have become popular in metropolitan social circles, where ladies of fanciful disposition have provided little exercises suggestive of afternoon parties in camp. Sometimes a tiny drum is beaten at intervals in the vicinity of the tea-table, where a lady of the household, or a favorite friend, presides.

Sometimes a young lady, costumed as a vivandiere, sits or stands by the tea-urn as its presiding genius. These picturesque additions to an ordinary afternoon reception are often very pleasing.

The "at home" is seldom engraved on a reception card for a simple entertainment, unless it be after a wedding. If a series of receptions are to be given, the lower line on the left of the card may be simply: "Tuesdays in December, from three to seven o'clock."

These cards are sent in two envelopes. Less formal receptions or "at homes" may be signified by writing the day or days and hours for receiving upon the left corners of visiting cards, and possibly adding "kettle-drum." These are sent by post in a single wrapper. If two or more ladies are to receive with the hostess, their cards may or may not be inclosed with that of the lady of the house, according to inclination.

At a "kettle-drum," after the formal salutations are made, if there be not a crowd of guests, a tray with tea, cream and sugar is presented almost immediately by a domestic, and another servant offers simple refreshments to accompany it. If the rooms be filled, the guest is asked to seek tea at the table where it is served. Some hostesses invite a bevy of young society girls of their acquaintance to serve her guests with tea and refreshments, and to entertain them while they are eating; and they often wear coquettish caps, pretty aprons, and short dresses, to show their slippers and gay stockings. Formal leave-taking at kettle-drums is not expected; as they are a condensation of calls, after-calls can be omitted.

PARTIES, BALLS, AND GERMANS.

Although all evening parties are expected to include dancing, it is desirable that the word dancing should be engraved on the corner of the card of invitation, and the hour of commencing. The ball is of course only for dancing, and ends always with a substantial supper.

The hours mentioned in notes of invitation to balls is usually from half past nine to half past eleven, but from nine to half past nine are the favorite hours named in notes of invitation to balls in Cincinnati. These notes are sent out from ten to twenty days in advance of the festivity, always by post, unless the lady writing is sure of her messenger. The party note or card is issued about a week or ten days prior to the appointed evening.

The ball demands the fullest of toilets which the season admits of for both ladies and gentlemen. Supper is usually served about half past twelve o'clock. Light refreshments, such as tea, coffee, chocolate, lemonade and bouillon, and also punches and wines, should be accessible during the entire evening.

The hostess sends out her invitations to either ball or party after calling by card or in person upon all her proposed guests to whom she is socially indebted. They are handsomely engraved in script, and issued in her own name for a ball, but in both her own and her husband's name for a party.

The following is the fashionable formula for the ball:

MRS. ANDREW SMITH
Requests the pleasure of your presence on Thursday evening, December fourth, at half past nine o'clock.
Dancing. No. — Pike Street.

The party invitation not only indicates an earlier hour for arriving, but instead of the simple word "Dancing" in the left corner it may be engraved "Dancing at eleven."

Of course this invitation must be accepted or declined within two or three days after its reception. The form of acceptance or regret is written in the name or names of the party invited:

MR. AND MRS. FREDERICK MARSHALL
Accept with pleasure (or decline with sincere regret)
MRS. FARQUHAR ALEXANDER'S
Kind invitation for January third.
No. — Eighth Street.

The wife enters the drawing-room on her husband's right arm, or the eldest lady occupies this position, provided the lady be not married, and there be more than one lady accompanying the gentleman. It is becoming more and more the custom for the lady to enter the ball-room unassisted.

When passing in or out of an apartment the lady precedes the gentleman by a step, unless she retains his arm.

The guests find friends after greeting the hostess, until young ladies are engaged for the dance. When applying for the honor of dancing with a young lady, it is done with a polite recognition of the office and authority of the chaperon on the part of the gentleman who asks the pleasure.

The gentleman returns the lady directly to the care of her married or older lady friend, as soon as the dance is finished. He may linger here to converse with her if he desire, but the rules of the best society do not permit of his doing so elsewhere. If he takes the young lady to the dining-room, it is customary for the chaperon to go with them.

A gentleman is not as free as the lady at this moment. If he accompanies a lady or party of ladies, he must first be certain that they are properly attended at this important moment, before he can offer his services to others.

A lady cannot accept the attentions of any other gentleman in the supper-room, except the host, or some other member of his family.

If her escort be forgetful of her requirements, she must ask a servant only for whatever she may want.

While the hostess is receiving, no person should remain beside her, excepting the members of her family who receive with her, or such friends as she has designated to assist her. All persons entering should pass on to make room for others, those who wish to show her any attention seeking her later, when she is disengaged.

Ceremonious leave-takings at balls is not necessary, unless the hostess or some member of the family is conveniently near at the moment of departure. Gentlemen who go from one ball to another on the same night, as in London, dispense entirely with the formality.

These formalities of a private ball, apply also to a public entertainment for dancing, and they must be followed in the latter case with even severer strictness.

Calls after a ball are made on the hostess on the first of her regular reception days after receiving her hospitalities, or after having been compelled to decline the hospitality. If she have no fixed reception day, a card should be left for her within ten days after the entertainment.

DINNERS AND DINING OUT.

The lady who purposes giving a dinner makes a catalogue of all those whom she desires to invite to her house. From these she selects and groups those whom she thinks will be agreeable to one another from similarity of tastes, station, age or habits. Mental accomplishments should, and they do at the present day, enter largely into the selection.

When a dinner is given in honor of some one not famous, the choice of guests is comparatively easy, those who are not invited understanding the reason to be the lack of affiliation with the chief guest, and therefore forbearing all inquiries regarding the reason.

It is customary for those who give dinners often to have cards of invitation engraved, with blanks for names and dates. On an extra card, in the same envelope, should be the following form:

To meet
Mr. Robert Judson,
Of Cleveland.

If the dinner be very grand and formal, the guest well known, and there is little time for pre-arrangement, the honored person's name is engraved on the card of invitation, and sent out eight or ten days in advance. The reply should be immediate so that vacancies may be filled. If there is the slightest doubt about being able to be present, the invitation must be declined. If it be accepted, and an insurmountable obstacle comes in between the guest and the dinner, instant explanations must be made, as an empty chair at a feast is a depressing object, and usually leaves some lady without an escort, or some gentleman alone.

Invitations to a dinner are given in the name of both host and hostess. If it be an engraved card or note, the name of host and hostess occupies one line, extending across the card; the request follows, in smaller script, with the name of the invited person or persons written across in a blank space arranged by the engraver. Below this are the date and hour of the dinner.

Until very recently, the initials R. S. V. P. (Repondez, s'il vous plait) have been engraved upon all formal cards, but they are less and less frequently seen. To thus ask, or even remind, a lady or gentlemen that an invitation should be answered, is a faint reproach upon their breeding.

The only place where R. S. V. P. may be written with strict etiquette and propriety, is to an informal note which the receiver might otherwise place among the unconsidered trifles of social life, but which, for some adequate reason, the sender desires to have answered.

The word "company" is used in an invitation to dinner, but "presence" is preferred in a card that invites a guest to a wedding.

The day of the week is written in letters, but the day of the month may be in numerals if preferred.

An engraved request sent to an acquaintance is usually in one of the following forms:

MR. AND MRS. JAMES HUNTINGTON
Request the pleasure of
..... Company
At Dinner on .....
..... 187 , at .. o'clock.
No. — Freeman Avenue.

Or,

MR. AND MRS. JAMES HUNTINGTON
Request the pleasure of
.....
Company at Dinner
On .....
At seven o'clock.
No. — Freeman Avenue.

If a note is engraved, a monogram or crest may be placed at the middle of the top of the sheet. If a card is used, it is in better form to place this device only on the envelope. Monograms and ciphers are oftener used than crests in this country.

The engraved forms of invitation to a dinner, given in honor of a noted person, reads:

MR. AND MRS. ERNEST ALLEN
Request the pleasure of
.....
Company on Tuesday,
January 20th, at seven o'clock, to meet the HON. MR. AND MRS. WOODGATE.
No. — Richmond Street.

The following form is used as a prompt response:

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAMS BENTLEY
Accept with pleasure
Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Allen's invitation to dinner
At seven o'clock, Tuesday evening,
January 20th.

A response should express a feeling of disappointment as follows:

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAMS BENTLEY
Regret that a previous engagement or illness, or some misfortune,
Prevents the acceptance of
Mr. and Mrs. Allen's invitation
For Tuesday, January 20th.

The degree of intimacy of the acquaintance regulates, to a certain extent, the form of the reply. Regret is always presumed to be genuine.

Guests should arrive punctually from five to ten minutes before the dinner-hour, the hostess in all probability not being able to receive them earlier. Later than this does not allow proper time for introductions, and the arrangement of escorts.

If the guests know one another, cards can be handed on a tray by a servant at the door. He selects the one with his own, and a lady's name, and after greeting the hostess, seeks his partner, and awaits the announcement of dinner. If the guests are unacquainted, the hostess suggests to each gentleman his partner, presents him, and tells him whether his place at table is at the right or left of the hostess.

Cards, either plain or ornamental, according to the taste or the ceremoniousness of the dinner, are laid at each lady's and gentleman's plate, with their names upon them. The menu card is usually hidden beneath it.

The dinner is announced by the chief waiter, who stands at the entrance to the drawing-room which opens toward the dining-room, and bows to the host. The latter is alert, anticipating the information. He offers his left arm to the lady-in-chief for this particular occasion. She may be the wife of the eldest gentleman, or the especially honored guest, as before explained. He proceeds first, and his guests follow him to the dining-room, his wife entering last with the gentleman entitled to most consideration. Each pair find their assigned position by the card which awaits them, assisted by the information previously furnished by the host in regard to the side of the table chosen for them. This is done as quietly as possible, as nothing is less elegant than a bustling manner.

When the dinner is over, the hostess bows to the lady at the right of the host, rises, and the guests rise also. The gentlemen either stand until the ladies leave, or conduct them to the door, and return. It is good form, but not incumbent to escort the ladies to the drawing room. The gentlemen smoke in the dining-room, or in an apartment provided for the purpose, not remaining long from the drawing-room.

Coffee is served at table after the dessert, or in the drawing-room half an hour later. In the latter case the hostess usually sits by the coffee-urn, and the gentlemen may carry the coffee-cups to the ladies, followed by a servant, who bears a tray, upon which are sugar, cream, and often a handsome, low cut-glass carafe of brandy.

Guests may leave after coffee, and should not in any event linger more than two hours. A person desiring to leave before the rest should inform the hostess beforehand, and then leave without formal adieux.

Etiquette requires a call on the hostess within a week after the dinner, or before, if she have a stated reception day sooner. If the reception day is not convenient, cards can be left in person (the right side or right-hand upper corner turned over), for each grown member of the family.

Gentlemen without wives, mothers or sisters to carry their cards for them, are permitted by the strictest approving etiquette to send them by post. Of course this is only done when a call in person, or by the hand of a relative, is impossible.

A lady goes to a dinner-party in whatever is considered full toilette for that season, and the gentlemen also. Gloves are removed after being seated at the table, and need not be replaced again during the evening.

BREAKFASTS, LUNCHEONS AND SUPPERS.

The hour for giving a breakfast varies according to its formality from half-past nine till twelve, the latter hour being only allowable where elegance rather than sociability is studied. Macaulay said: "Dinner parties are mere formalities, but you invite a man to breakfast, because you want to see him." Both gentlemen and ladies may be guests at the breakfast table, but ladies only usually receive invitations to a luncheon party. The breakfast is more social and enjoyable than dinner.

Invitations to a breakfast, not too formal, are written, and need not be issued more than five days in advance of an entertainment.

The style of the note may be quite as informal as any brief but friendly letter, or it may be the lady's visiting-card which conveys the request, if this card be engraved after the customary form prevailing in Cincinnati, with the address in the right-hand lower corner, and the ordinary day for receiving callers upon the left. Below the lady's name be written:

BREAKFAST AT TEN O'CLOCK,
January 12th.

If another than the usual "at home" day be preferred, an ink line may be drawn through the engraved day of the week, and the following form is written upon the card:

BREAKFAST, FRIDAY, AT TEN O'CLOCK,
January 12th.

Numerals are written upon a card, but they are not engraved, except it be the number of a residence.

This breakfast should never be elaborate, but it cannot be too dainty in its food, or in the appointments of the table. Walking costumes are worn by both gentlemen and ladies, also visiting-gloves, which are removed at table. The descent from the dressing-room and greetings between the hostess and guest are just the same as at a dinner party.

If there are more than eight guests, cards should be placed indicating places. If the guests be unequal in number, ladies are informed of their lady-partners by the hostess, and they seek their assigned places as usual.

The host conducts to the table the eldest lady, or the one who, as a bride, or for any other reason, is entitled to special consideration. If there be no host, the lady of the house leads the way accompanied by the most honored guest, lady or gentleman.

The food is served from the sideboard, or upon the table in courses, according to taste or convenience, the only difference between the forms and those of a dinner being that the hostess presides over the serving of the tea, coffee and chocolate.

Guests are expected to leave half an hour after the breakfast is over.

Formal breakfasts require elaborate, but not full dress for the ladies; a morning or frock coat for gentlemen, with light-colored trousers and waistcoats, to correspond with the coat.

The general directions for descent to the dining-room, the conduct of host and guests are the same as for dinner.

The general rules regulating a breakfast apply equally well to a luncheon.

After a very formal breakfast, a call on the hostess is expected, according to rules elsewhere given. An informal breakfast requires no after-call.

Suppers are presumed to be for gentlemen only, and are served from nine to ten o'clock. The informalities of invitation are all of the same kind. The invitation may be verbal, or like this:

SUPPER AT TEN O'CLOCK.

Saturday, January 20th.

If it is a fish supper, it is served with fruits, salads, and without a sweet dessert, with coffee, and with wines at the pleasure of the host.

A game supper is confined almost strictly to wild fowl, with wines and coffee; but the dessert may be pastry, creams and bonbons.

A wine or champagne supper is made up of various luxuries, and differs from the dinner chiefly in the preference given to cold meats. The dessert is commonly rich and varied.

ETIQUETTE OF WEDDINGS.

Strict form does not require the announcement of an engagement, but a betrothal may be made known to friends in some pleasant manner, either by a dinner-party at the home of the bride, or at the home of the groom, at which the immediate family of the bride must be present.

Compliments by note, gifts of flowers, and calls upon the lady follow.

During the term of betrothal little parties may be given to the engaged couple by their immediate circle of friends, at which they may appear and receive friendly congratulations. This is sufficient as an announcement of the formal engagement.

The intended bride foregoes visiting during the brief interval presumed to elapse between the engagement and the wedding, except that she leaves a card in person at the residences of all her friends, without entering, just before the day of the ceremony. This last call is one not to be omitted.

The wedding-cards are sent out at least ten days before the ceremony is to take place. Invitations to remote places must be forwarded sooner.

The invitations to the marriage-ceremony are in the name of the bride's father and mother, or of one alone if only one be living. If the bride stands in the relationship of ward, niece, grand-daughter, cousin or simply friend, to the persons or person issuing the invitation, the fact is noted in the formula in the place of the word "daughter."

Accompanying the engraved note is a card of invitation to the reception, for such persons as are entitled to be bidden to partake of the festivities of the occasion.

Where the ceremony is in a church, tickets of admission may be used if it is deemed necessary, one or more of them being inclosed in the envelope with the ceremonial invitation for distribution to personal friends of the invited. It is well, however, if possible, to confine the ticket distribution to immediate personal friends.

Invitations to weddings are now engraved on one sheet of paper, the separate cards of bride or groom being seldom used. The engraving is in plain script. The paper is thick, fine, and shaped so as to fold once. The cipher, monogram or crest should be at the middle of the top of the page, and not printed in color. It is now thought to be in better style to put the device on the envelope, instead of on the note. The following is a suitable formula:*

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Remington
Request your presence
At the marriage of their daughter,
Miss Maria Louisa,
to
Mr. William Henry Jameson,
On Tuesday morning, September tenth, 1878, at eleven o'clock.
Christ Church, Cincinnati.

The word "presence" is considered preferable to "company."

Another card is inclosed for more familiar friends. The following is good form for the invitation to the reception:

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Southgate,
At Home,
Tuesday Morning, September 10th, from half past eleven until four o'clock,
No.— Broadway.

*Samples of Wedding and Visiting Cards in all the approved styles may be examined at the Arcade Bookstore, No. 179 Vine street.

The admission card is narrow, long, and neatly and plainly engraved in script:

CHRIST CHURCH.
Ceremony at eleven o'clock.

The portion of the ceremony not absolutely fixed by the church, may be tastefully varied by the parties interested. For an elaborate wedding, rehearsals are desirable.

The master of ceremonies should be early present to see that the awning and carpet are not disturbed by idlers. He sees that the white ribbon is passed across the main aisle at a sufficient distance from the altar to accommodate the invited guests.

The following modern ceremonial is considered good in Cincinnati: The bridemaids and an equal number of ushers are chosen from among the friends of both families. The ushers wait inside the church door, give their arms to the ladies as they arrive, and escort them to their seats. The gentlemen who attend the ladies follow.

When the bridal party has arranged itself for entrance, the ushers, in pairs, march slowly up to the altar and turn to the right, keeping step to the organ music. After a very slight interval the bridemaids follow in pairs and turn to the left.

Another very brief interval of waiting, and the bride, escorted by her father, and entirely veiled, with her eyes cast down, follows her companions. The groom comes forward from the vestry-room to meet her, takes her hand, and places her at the altar. Both kneel for a moment's silent devotion. The parents stand just behind her, and slightly at the left. The service by the clergyman proceeds as usual. All churches, at present, use the ring, and vary the sentiment of its adoption to suit the customs and ideas of their own rites. A jeweled ring has been for many years the sign and symbol of betrothal; but, among people with German tastes, a plain gold circlet, with the date of the engagement inscribed within, is preferred. This can be passed by the groom to the clergyman, and used as a wedding-ring, a jeweled ring being placed on the finger of the bride soon after the service. The jewel should be perfect, even if small.

The bridal veil is rarely raised in church, and kissing in the public place is obsolete.

The bridemaids follow the bride and groom out, each on the arm of an usher. The ushers then hasten to the place of reception to welcome the bride at her own door, and to arrange themselves about the bride and groom, in the drawing-room, half the bridemaids standing on the side of the bride, and half on the side of the groom. The ushers wait at the door of the drawing-room for guests as they arrive from church, and present them to the newly wedded pair. If ladies are present without gentlemen, they escort them to the refreshment room, afterwards leaving them to provide for themselves.

Bridal gifts are seldom displayed. If they are shown, it is with the names of the donors detached, to prevent invidious comparisons. The universal bridal present is a disused custom. The bride acknowledges the gift by a note in her own hand. Gifts to the bride are supposed to be in accordance with her known tastes, or of practical use. They are commonly marked with her maiden name.

Gifts that can be worn at the ceremony are considered en regle from the bride and groom to the bridemaids and ushers.

At a morning wedding, the groom and ushers wear dark coats, and vests of corresponding color, with light trowsers, and necktie, and gloves light, but not white. At an evening wedding, the bride and groom retire quietly to dress for their wedding tour. At a morning wedding only bridemaids, ushers and relatives remain to witness the departure.

It is not etiquette to inquire where the honeymoon is to be spent.

If the newly-married begin housekeeping at once, cards are issued for morning or evening receptions at no distant day, to which only such persons are invited as they desire to retain as friends. The following form of card will do:

Mr. and Mrs. William Henry Johnson,
At Home,
Tuesday evenings in November, from eight to eleven o'cloch.
No. — Auburn Ave., Mt. Auburn.

On these occasions an elaborate table is not considered in refined taste. The bride wears a reception toilet, and the groom is in full evening dress. After an informal wedding, and to be sent to distant friends, cards are prepared in the following form and sent by post:

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES REMINGTON
Announce the marriage of their daughter,
MISS MARIA LOUISA,
and
MR. WILLIAM HENRY JOHNSON,
Tuesday, October 10th, 1878.
No. — Seventh Street, Cincinnati.

In response to this, a note of congratulation is usually sent to the parents of the bride, and also to the bridal pair, if the intimacy of the parties warrants it.

If there has been no reception, and a reception follows their return to town, even though the young people take possession of their own house, the mother of the bride usually gives one to them. If it be given only in the evening, cards should be issued in the name of the parents and the young people, and the two cards sent in the same envelope.

The method of entrance into church given above is approved by the best society, but the old ceremonial can be used if preferred. If there are no bridemaids, the ushers walk into church in pairs, just in advance of the groom, and, parting at the altar, half stand at one side and half at the other. While the clergyman is congratulating the bride they become pairs again.

Weddings at home vary little from those at churches. An altar, a place for kneeling, and floral devices are easily arranged. When the marriage ceremony is concluded, the party turn in their places and face their friends, who wait to congratulate them. If space be of importance, the kneeling-stool, and even the floral altar, may be removed a little later, without observation. The latter, however, is usually pushed back against the wall, and adds to the decorative part of the festivity.

Calls or card leaving, by all the guests, upon the family of the bride, is a rigorous formality within ten days after the wedding.

OPERA AND THEATRE PARTIES.

Strictly speaking, there is nothing of this kind to advise about in Cincinnati, and yet such entertainments are susceptible of giving the most thorough social enjoyment. In the East they have become very popular of late, being confined almost altogether to the upper classes. They are sometimes given by families, but most frequently they are projected by young bachelors who have no homes to which they can invite guests, and who are desirous in some such agreeable way to return the hospitalities and courteous treatment of householders.

If the party is given by a bachelor, he first secures a chaperon for the young ladies he is about to invite. If she be a relative, so much more peaceful and harmonious the proceedings.

He gives his invitations in person, first soliciting the consent of the mother to the arrangement that her daughter may be his guest for the evening, at the same time mentioning what married lady will accompany them, and furnishing the names of the gentlemen who are invited to be present.

The dinner is usually given in a private parlor of some fashionable hotel or restaurant, or in the house of some friend. The usual dinner formalities are followed, the matron of the party acting as hostess. The lady guests, if not accompanied by father or brother, are usually attended by a waiting woman, who returns home in the carriage to come back again for her mistress at the hour appointed, which is usually half-past twelve.

The dinner hour is usually six o'clock for this style of party. Retiring from the table, the party proceeds to the opera in carriages furnished by the host; and the gentleman assigned as dinner escort to a lady accompanies her to the opera, where boxes have necessarily been secured, because the party is in full toilette.

After the opera or theatre, the guests return to the banqueting room for refreshments, and then separate, a gentleman accompanying each young lady, provided only her serving maid call for her with a carriage. If her father, brother, or relative arrive in her carriage, the gentleman who has been her attendant during the evening, escorts her to her conveyance. He should call within three days to inquire for her health, or leave a card, provided a visit be impossible.

The bachelor host is required by the laws of good society to pay his respects, and to return thanks to mother and daughter within a week for the honor and the pleasure conferred upon him by the attendance of his lady guests.

The young ladies pay an early visit of thanks to the chaperon.

Another form of the opera or theatre party, while it is an equally formal affair, is more sensible and less extravagant, as it only includes an after supper.

The host calls upon his anticipated guests, and after receiving an acceptance of his invitation — which must also include a gentleman of the family, or a near kinsman of the young lady — he leaves entrance tickets for the proposed entertainment. The party meet in the box or boxes, where the matron selected awaits them with their host.

After the theatre, the supper, which has been ordered in advance, is served to them at some fashionable resort, and the hour for returning home is decided upon by the matron of the evening. The host designates to each gentleman the lady he is to conduct to the table. The supper is not uncommonly followed by a few dances, but this is less often a part of the festivity at a restaurant parlor than when the bachelor receives his guests at the house of a friend.

This style of opera or theatre party is by far the most popular of the season, and is, of course, less expensive and troublesome to both host and guests. The more elaborate formalities, as was suggested, are only provided by the very rich, and mothers of refined daughters do not encourage ostentation. The customs of these costly pleasures are furnished only because they are stylish, and prescribed by "New York Etiquette" as the correct thing for young bachelors to do, who have the three requisites: time, taste, and money.

In both forms mentioned, the young ladies are expected to be as rigorously attentive to the duty they owe their chaperon, as if attending a ceremonious dinner, and the host is required to as carefully follow the proper formalities of calling as if a banquet had been given instead of a supper.

From eight to twelve guests are the usual number, the smallness of the circle, or coterie, being its greatest recommendation.

Of the two entertainments, the simple theatre party will be found the most enjoyable, and in this city of clubs and club life, and theatres and theatre going, a very graceful and satisfying thing for our young bachelors of quality to inaugurate.

If these parties are given by a lady in her own house, the invitations are issued by informal written notes in her own name, and the dinner almost invariably precedes the public amusement.

After the opera or theatre, it is proper for her to invite her guests to a restaurant for light refreshment, but she oftener than otherwise begs them to return to her own residence, where a dainty supper awaits them. A lady guest may, however, excuse herself from this after part of the hospitality, if she pleases, and not give offense. Party calls in the usual manner.

If private theatricals or music is to be a part or all of the entertainment at a gentleman's residence, the word theatricals, or musicale, is written upon the left lower part of the card of invitation. If the pleasure be accepted, a prompt attendance is compulsory.

If dancing is to follow, the hour of its commencement is also mentioned. It may be written across the card of invitation in this wise:

Theatricals at eight o'clock: dancing at eleven.

If the company is desired to wear fancy dress, or be masked, the words fancy dress, or bal masque, may be written at the left lower side.

THEATRE ETIQUETTE FOR GENTLEMEN.

In inviting a lady to accompany you to the theatre, opera, a concert, or any other public place of amusement, send the invitation the day previous to the one selected for taking her, and write it in the third person. If it is the first time you have invited her, include her mother, sister, or some other lady in the invitation.

If she accepts your invitation, let it be your next care to secure good seats, for it is but a poor compliment to invite a lady to go to a place of amusement, and put her in an uncomfortable seat where she can neither hear, see, nor be seen; especially the latter.

Although, when alone, you will act a courteous part in giving your seat to a strange lady, who is standing in a crowded concert room, you should not do so when you are with a lady. By giving up your place beside her, you may place a lady next her, whom she will find an unpleasant companion, and you are yourself separated from her, when the conversation between the acts makes one of the greatest pleasures of an evening spent in this way. In case of accident, too, it gives her the appearance of having come alone. Your first duty when you are escorting a lady, is to the lady before all others.

When you are with a lady at a place of amusement, you must not leave your seat until you rise to escort her home. If at the opera, you may invite her to promenade between the acts, but if she declines, you may remain in your seat.

Let your conversation be in a tone that will not disturb those seated near you, unless you consider yourself part of the performance.

Any lover-like airs or attitudes, although you may have the right to assume them, are in excessively bad taste in public.

If the evening you have appointed be a stormy one, you must call for your companion with a carriage, and this is the more elegant way of taking her even if the weather does not make it absolutely necessary.

When you are entering a concert-room, or the box of a theatre, walk before your companion up the aisle, until you reach the seats you have secured; then turn, offer your hand to her, and place her in the inner seat, taking the outside one yourself; in going out, if the aisle is too narrow to walk two abreast, you again precede your companion until you reach the lobby, when you turn and offer your arm.

Secure your programme, libretto or concert-bill before taking your seat, as, if you leave it, in order to obtain them, you may find some one else occupying your place when you return. Or, you may find a lady in your seat, in which case you have no alternative, but must accept the penalty of your carelessness, by standing all the evening.

If your seats are secured, call for your companion in time to be seated three or four minutes before the performance commences; but if you are visiting a hall where you cannot engage seats, it is best to go early.

If you are alone and see ladies present with whom you are acquainted, you may, with perfect propriety, go and chat with them between the acts, but when with a lady, never leave her to speak to another lady.

Never, unless urgently solicited, attach yourself to any party at a place of amusement, even if some of the members of it are your own relatives or intimate friends.

LADIES' THEATRE INVITATIONS.

A young lady may, if she wishes to attend a party, ball or concert, or other place where an escort is required, and is provided with no suitable one, write to her affianced husband, or, if she is not engaged, to some friend of the other sex with whom she is on sufficiently intimate terms to venture to take such a liberty, and request him to accompany her.

If any expense is to be incurred in thus attending her, she should purchase the admission cards and inclose them in her note to him. Such a note may read as follows:

Miss Ida Avery presents her compliments to Mr. Charles Moore, and requests him to do her the favor of escorting her to Pike's on Friday evening, the 15th, if he has not a previous engagement. Inclosed please find tickets of admission.

When the parties are on the terms of intimacy usual between an affianced couple, a less ceremonious form of invitation is allowable.

MISCELLANEOUS RULES.

"Decorum," says a French writer, "is nothing less than the respect of one's self and others brought to bear upon every circumstance of life." In all relations, whether social or domestic, anything approaching coarseness, undue familiarity, or levity of conduct, is prolific of evil.

The proper giving and receiving of gifts may be almost styled an intuition which everyone does not possess. A generous person may unwittingly wound where he intends to confer nothing but gratification. A grateful person may, through want of tact, seem almost to deprecate the liberality of the giver.

A gift should always have some other value to the receiver than its mere price. "Our tokens of love," says Emerson, "are, for the most part, barbarous, cold and lifeless, because they do not represent our life. The only gift is a portion of thyself. Therefore, let the farmer give his corn; the miner, a gem; the sailor, coral and shells; the painter, his picture; and the poet, his poem."

A present should never be given with an expectation of a return. Nor should the recipient of a present ever be reminded of it by the giver.

In presenting a book to a friend do not write his or her name in it, unless requested.

Unmarried ladies should not accept presents from gentleman to whom they are neither related nor engaged. A married lady may occasionally accept a present from a gentleman who is indebted to her for hospitality.

Presents made by a married lady to a gentleman, should be in the name of both herself and her husband.

Never refuse a gift if offered in kindliness, unless the circumstances are such that you cannot with propriety or consistency receive it. On the other hand, never make a gift which is really beyond or out of proportion to your means.

Acknowledge the receipt of a present immediately, accompanying the acknowledgement by sincere, yet not too extravagant thanks. If you employ the latter, your sincerity may with good reason be doubted.

Do not make it a religious duty, so to speak, to return a present at once. You are justified in supposing that the gift has been offered for the purpose of affording you a pleasure, not with the expectation of a return, like a commercial transaction.

In society all should receive equal attention, the young as well as the old. The natural gaucherie of young girls results more from the slights which they are constantly receiving, and constantly expecting to receive, than from any real awkwardness inherent in their age.

Always give precedence to those older or of higher position than yourself, unless they request you to take the precedence, when it is more polite to obey than to adhere to the strict rule of etiquette, since compliance with and adherence to the wishes of others display the finest breeding. In matters of precedence be more careful to give others their rank than to take your own.

Always express your own opinions with modesty, and, if called upon, defend them, but without that warmth which may lead to hard feelings. Do not enter into argument. Having spoken your mind, and thus shown you are not cowardly in your beliefs or opinions, drop the subject and lead to some other topic. There is seldom any profit in discussion.

In meeting people more than once in a public promenade, it is only necessary to salute them the first time in passing.

It is now entirely out of date to ask another at a dinner-table to drink wine with you. Each drinks at his own option, and as little as he chooses. If a person declines, he should by no means be pressed to take more. If he refuses to drink it altogether, he has a perfect right to do so, and no notice should be taken of the fact.

It is neither polite nor respectful to smoke in the presence of ladies, even though they have given permission. In truth, a gentleman will never ask such permission. Neither will he smoke in any room which ladies are in the habit of frequenting. This is etiquette, but not comfort.

Always request a favor. Never issue a command, even if you have the authority to compel the observance of your wishes. Always recognize a favor, even from an inferior, with courteous thanks.

A gentleman may keep his hat on when handing a lady to a carriage, certain rules of etiquette to the contrary notwithstanding. Indeed, for him to do otherwise, and at the same time give proper assistance to the lady, he would find it necessary to have a dozen hands.

Never affect superiority. In the company of an inferior never let him feel his inferiority. If you invite an inferior as your guest, treat him with all the politeness and consideration you would show an equal. Assumption of superiority in the distinguishing trait of a parvenu.

Conform your conduct as far as possible to the company you chance to be with, only do not throw yourself into improper company. It is related of a certain king that he once turned his tea into a saucer and drank it thus, because two country ladies whom he was entertaining did so. That king comprehended the true spirit of a gentleman. It is better even to laugh at and join in with vulgarity, so that it do not degenerate into indecency, than to set yourself up as better and better-mannered than those with whom you may chance to be associated. True politeness and genuine good manners often not only permit but absolutely demand a temporary violation of the ordinary obligations of etiquette.

Never address a mere acquaintance by his Christian name. He will have reason to take offense at your presumption. No lady will speak of a gentleman by his surname without the customary prefix of Mr.

Never speak of your husband or wife by their initial letter. Among very intimate friends it may be allowable to mention them by their Christian names, but among strangers and mere acquaintances they should always be referred to as Mr. or Mrs. ——. It is not even allowable to mention them as "my wife" or "my husband."

On entering a room bow slightly as a general salutation before speaking to each of the persons assembled.

"Civility," says Lord Chesterfield, "is particularly due to all women; and remember that no provocation whatsoever can justify any man in not being civil to every woman; and the greatest man would justly be reckoned a brute if he were not civil to the meanest woman. It is due to their sex, and is the only protection they have against the superior strength of ours."

Bishop Beveridge says, "Never speak of a man's virtues before his face or his faults behind his back."

Another maxim is, "In private, watch your thoughts; in your family, watch your temper; in society, watch your tongue."

HOW TO CARVE.

As nearly all formal dinners are now served a la Russe, carving is not the accomplishment that it was. Formerly in England there were regular teachers of the art, and Lady Mary Wortly Montague confesses that she once took lessons of a professor three times a week.

Even at the present day one often attends or gives a family or old-fashioned dinner, and the few hints below will always be found of value to the novice in his first struggles with the big knife and fork.

Dr. Johnson said, that "You should praise, not ridicule, your friend who carves with as much earnestness of purpose as though he were legislating."

The best way to cut a ham, in order that the fat and lean may be served evenly, is to begin in the middle of the ham, and cut out thin, circular slices. Good carvers, though, often begin at the large end of the ham.

In carving a roast sirloin of beef, you may begin at either end, or in the middle. The outside should be sliced downward to the bone, while the inside or tenderloin part should be sliced thin, lengthwise, and a little of the soft fat given with each piece. You may ask whether the outside or inside is preferred; otherwise a small bit of the inside should be served with each plate, as this is generally regarded as the most choice portion.

But little skill is required in carving a round of beef. It should be cut in thin, smooth and even slices.

A fillet of veal should be cut in the same way as a round of beef. Ask whether the brown or outside is preferred. If it is stuffed, cut deep through the stuffing, and serve each plate with a thin slice.

In carving a leg of mutton, slice it lightly, for if you press too heavily the knife will not cut, and you will squeeze out all the gravy, and serve your guests with dry meat. Begin to cut in the middle, as that is the most juicy part. Cut thin, deep slices, and help each person to some of the brown or outside.

In carving a fore quarter of lamb, separate the shoulder from the breast and ribs, by passing the knife under and through it; then separate the gristly part from the ribs, and help from that, or the ribs, as may be chosen.

A haunch of mutton is the leg and a part of the loin. In carving help to about equal parts of the fat of the loin, and the lean of the leg. Cut each part directly down through in slices, about a quarter of an inch thick.

A saddle of mutton should be cut in thin slices from tail to end, beginning close to the back-bone.

A roast pig should be cut in two before it is sent to the table. Begin to carve by separating the shoulder from one side, then divide the ribs. The joints may be divided, or pieces cut from them. The ribs are considered the finest part, though some prefer the neck end.

In carving a duck or goose, cut off the apron, or the part directly under the neck, and outside of the merry-thought. Then turn the neck-end towards you, and cut the breast in slices. Take off the leg by putting the fork into the small end of the bone, pressing it to the body, at the same time passing the knife into and through the joint. Take off the wing by putting the fork into the small end of the pinion, and pressing it close to the body while the knife is dividing the joint. The wing side-bones and also the back and lower side-bones, should then be cut off. The best pieces are the breast and thighs.

A turkey or chicken is carved by first detaching the legs from the body. Next, take off the wings, by dividing the joint with the knife; then lift up the pinion with your fork, and draw the wing towards the leg, and the muscles will separate in a better form than if cut. Then remove the merry-thought from the neck-bones, and divide the breast from the carcass by cutting through the tender-ribs. Then lay the back upwards, and cut it across half-way between the neck and the rump. The breast and thighs are considered the choice bits.

Nearly all kinds of small game birds are carved by simply cutting them in two, from the neck to the tail, unless they are given whole.

Never pour gravy over white meat, as it would destroy its delicate appearance. Another excellent idea is to keep it off the table-cloth.

There are many little ways of seasoning meats and game, which may be done by the carver, as, for instance: before cutting up a duck, slice the breast, and pour over the gashes a few spoonfuls of sauce made of port wine, lemon juice, salt, and Cayenne pepper. Or, after you have cut off the apron and breast-bone of a goose, pour into the body a glass of port wine and a small teaspoonful of mustard. Experience will furnish you with many other points that will finally make you an artist.

The Cincinnati Gazette.

The Leading Newspaper of the West.

THE GAZETTE has been in existence eighty-six years, and its growth aptly illustrates the general growth of American journalism, for no paper of equal age has attained a similar circulation and celebrity.

THE GAZETTE has three editions—Daily, Semi-Weekly, and Weekly—printed from stereotype plates, on the Hoe Double Perfecting Press, which has a self-feeding capacity of about 30,000 papers per hour. It prints both sides, cuts, pastes, and folds at the same time, and is the most rapid press in the world.

AS a complete newspaper the CINCINNATI GAZETTE has no superior. Its ability and its integrity are recognized and unquestioned. It has a national reputation for its fearlessness, no less than for its fairness in the discussion of matters of political and public policy.

THE weekly edition of the GAZETTE is the most widely circulated family and agricultural paper in the West. It has more than 3,000 regular club agents, and is sent to subscribers at over 4,000 post-offices throughout the land.

THE GAZETTE now occupies its new six-story stone front building, on the South-East Corner of Sixth and Vine Streets, one of the most complete, if not the most perfect, newspaper offices in the United States.

The Cincinnati Daily Star.

A Newspaper of "To-Day."

Is the home paper for the people of Cincinnati and neighboring cities. While other journals have made efforts to become favorites in the counting room the STAR is edited with special reference to the wants of the home circle. It is the people's paper for the homes of the people, and the immense circulation it has attained gives the strongest possible evidence that its managers have been successful in making good what the people read. It strives to be reliable rather than sensational, and aims to render "justice to all with malice towards none." It has no axes to grind, is the organ of no clique nor party, and is free to criticise or commend wherever either is needed in the public interest.

The STAR publishes the news of the National Associated Press, the only news organization that is "National" in its character, with "its own" agents in every part of the world. Its news is presented with more promptness than is possible with any local organization that purchases news from other Associations, and has no control over the agents that collect it.

Besides this, the STAR has an army of well drilled, live special telegraphic correspondents that send it at once that reaches the other leading cities of the country.

The STAR, with its present system of Associated Press news and special correspondents, using both lines of telegraph to any extent necessary to tell the whole story of the day's doings, is the ONLY afternoon paper that has ever given the people of this vicinity a A COMPLETE, RELIABLE, AND PROMPT EPITOME OF THE NEWS OF THE DAY, "ON THE DAY OF ITS OCCURRENCE."

ITS LOCAL AND SUBURBAN NEWS,

ESTABLISHED 1850.

Daily, Weekly, and Sunday Editions.

The VOLKSFREUND is the only daily German democratic paper in Cincinnati. It advocates true democratic principles, the maintenance of our constitution, with its amendments, equal rights to all, without distinction of person, race, nationality or creed, local self government, sound money, a tariff for revenue only, the abolition of all monopolies, the extinction of all corruption, and the restoration of purity in politics as it existed in the times of the fathers of our republic.

The VOLKSFREUND has a very large circulation in the City, in Covington, Newport, and all other neighboring towns. The weekly edition goes to every State in the Union. Its circulation is greater than that of any other German democratic paper in the West.
